Things That are Said of Logan.
To public man's death has called out more kindly expressions than that of General Logan her. The evident sincerity of the culogies shows that they are heart-left, not mere lip service. This kindly feeling is far from being confined to his own party fam to his intimate party friends. From Democrats and from the Democratic press have tome beautiful tributes to Logan's grainwart integrity, ability and splendid public service.

At the same time his death is made the occasion for reviving some of the absund stories told about him while he lived. The country is told oace more that no-body ever knew his age, since he would not looked, that he dyed his bair, and that, in fact, his death was due to the hair dye he used.

Much used to be said about General Logan's deelere to conceal his age. Yet his age was explicitly stated—the year, month and dy given by Secator Callom in placing General Logan in nomination for the Precidency in the Chicago Convention of 1854. No one who were ever within ten

No one who was ever within ten one. Hired servants are usually so indiffact of General Lopun needs to be told that the raven's-wing black of his flowing hair was not produced by artificial means.

Our idea of Logan is that he was too etrong a character to yield to such a weakness. There have been great men who whose coul is wrapped up in his own tight and hard hide; who takes but does not give; who lets every good cause lock out for itself; who has no feeling heart and no helping hand for the ttricken hearts that caunot help themselves. Who would want to live in a world of dead men?

I have made Pharatoh's like wax, Herod's like nato mush. They seemed to have cooked hard as eggs do.

Mrs. H. praised the jelly and the pickles which I had bobmade, and remarked upon the excellence of the mincement, all the mage warmly when I told her whose gift it was. I almost broke down with the telling. Did ever poor child need mothers the proper than I just now? Mrs. H. Mid not ext the crast of her pic, I observed.

Open Barjat Fires.

Moved by what happened at the recent civility. A queerer compound never visited my table, an assertion that govers the Philadelphia Press, which has a way the Philadelphia Press, which h destruction by fire of the Temple Thestre, the Philadelphia Press, which has a way of advancing good thoughts, suggests that the Chief of the Fire Department be "given the power summarily to close all bars in the immediate neighborhood of a fire." Clear heads are never more needed than when a burning building is to be dealth with, and that is the time of all others when the inspiration of fire water is a menace to the public cafety.

There are people who attend fires for the mere excitement. Drink helps on the excitement, but does not help to put the fire out. Then there are others who "run to fires" from force of hebit contracted in the old times before the paid fire departments came to kneck the romance out of the fire laddy's life. Man of this latter class often reader good service, but even their skill and courage would not suffer from the closed bar. The miscellaneous congregation of sightseers pour into the convenient bar rooms and do their share to make a scene of confusion.

The idea of The Press is a good one, as applicable to other cities as to Philadelphia. It would meet with opposition warever it might be proposed, but the opposition would not be based on a regard for the public welfare.
